

Shaw Trust Work And Health Programme Video Transcript

Welcome to the Work and Health programme.

Finding a job can be tough and the journey long and difficult.

At times it might seem impossible.

The Work and Health programme is different from other employment services because it recognizes that everyone is unique.

It recognizes that everyone has their own set of challenges and that every path to employment is unique.

Your own journey starts with your support manager.

Your support manager will get to know you.

They will spend time learning about your life, your skills and the challenges you face getting a job.

Once they understand who you are and where you want to go, they will work with you to design a plan that will get you into work, for the long term.

They will introduce you to confidence boosting activities, work with you to improve your health and wellbeing and introduce you to a range of local activities to help you get a job.

They will organise work trials or placements and liaise with employers on adjustments you might need.

They can also arrange help with any housing, money or benefit problems you may have.

And if you have caring responsibilities, a problem with alcohol dependency or addiction they can organize the right specialized support just for you.

Even after you have found employment, your support manager will still be on hand to help you out until you are fully confident in your new job.

We want to get you into lasting quality employment.

This is your journey, let's make it work.
